NASIMA'S CHILDCARE / LOCAL SERVICES / CHILDCARE

Building a first social presence.

April 2025 - April 2026

I built the first social media presence for Nasima's Childcare, opening a new route for parent enquiries and delivering 5.7K paid views through Facebook campaigns.

Meta Ad Centre results from the campaigns I created for Nasima's Childcare, October 2025 to February 2026.

Selected live website excerpts: useful information and a view of the play environment.

The starting point

When I joined, Nasima's Childcare had a website but no social media presence and little online traction. I spotted an opportunity to help local parents discover the business beyond its website.

My contribution

- I took the initiative to launch and manage its Facebook page, building the social media foundation from scratch.
- I created parent-friendly Canva posts and ran Facebook campaigns aimed at local families.
- I updated website HTML content and imagery through GitHub, including funded-childcare information.

What this shows

I can spot an unmet marketing need and follow it through: setting up a channel, creating content, reaching a local audience and keeping information consistent.

Results in context

My Facebook campaigns delivered 5.7K paid views and 3.4K combined reported reach. Google Search Console recorded 1.7K search impressions between June 2025 and April 2026. Combined campaign reach may include audience overlap; search impressions are not website visits.

02 Real-world work Social content and live presenting

ANZARA / FASHION / SOCIAL MEDIA

Bringing collections to the feed.

January 2022 - December 2023

I created more than 100 promotional videos as part of Anzara's wider team, alongside live presenting. The two TikToks below are selected examples from that work.

The context

I used short-form content and livestreams to help bring collections to life beyond still product images, showing garments and connecting with viewers.

My contribution

- I created fashion content and short videos for the brand's social channels.
- I hosted livestreams and presented collections to an online audience.
- I worked across Reels, Stories, TikToks, YouTube and Facebook video.

What this shows

Confidence communicating a product's appeal, familiarity with platform-specific content and experience working as part of a brand's wider production effort.

Content in context

I worked with Anzara's wider team on content creation and presenting. Public TikTok view counts checked on 9 October 2026. The figures refer to these two videos, not an average across all my work.

03 Independent concept Self-initiated / not commissioned

FLORA / BEAUTY / SOCIAL CREATIVE

An idea with a natural flow.

Original Canva concept

A flowing-hair visual that turns a simple seasonal message into a recognisable beauty concept.

An independent beauty concept connecting flowing hair, summer style and a simple seasonal message.

The creative challenge

Give a local beauty business a simple, distinctive seasonal social post. I wanted the image and the words to work together rather than compete for attention.

The idea

I turned flowing hair into a waterfall: a visual metaphor for movement and flow. A restrained navy-and-white palette keeps the silhouette and brand name easy to recognise.

How I'd develop it

I'd pair the awareness post with a service-led Story and a clear booking link. I would test the message against a treatment-led version and compare booking-link clicks, not just likes.

Clear project status

This is my self-initiated creative concept, not work commissioned, approved or published by Flora. The proposed rollout and measurement are next-step ideas, not campaign results.

04 Independent concept Self-initiated / not commissioned

BODEN / FASHION / SEASONAL CREATIVE

Let the product idea bloom.

Original Canva concept

A dress silhouette grows from a flower, connecting a summer message to the product category in one glance.

An independent summer concept exploring the connection between flowers, dresses and seasonal style.

The creative challenge

Create a memorable seasonal fashion post without relying on a busy layout. The idea needed to communicate summer and clothing immediately.

The idea

The flower and dress share one silhouette, giving 'bloom' a visual meaning. Green, white space and a short headline make the concept feel fresh and easy to scan.

How I'd develop it

I'd extend the concept into a product-led carousel using approved collection photography, ending with a 'Shop summer dresses' call to action. I would compare product-page clicks and saves across the creative versions.

Clear project status

This is my self-initiated creative exercise, not work commissioned, approved or published by Boden. The proposed extension is a next-step idea, not a campaign result.

05 University project Academic concept / not commissioned

THE CHEEKY PANDA / CONSUMER GOODS / BRAND COMMUNICATIONS

Making a big message feel approachable.

University brand PR exercise

A two-sided brochure concept exploring how a playful brand voice can make an environmental message more engaging for a Gen Z audience.

Brochure front: a campaign hook, a brand message and an invitation to act.

View the front artwork ↗

Brochure reverse: three clear message sections, cropped for the portfolio.

View the reverse artwork ↗

The brief

Create a university brand PR concept for The Cheeky Panda, balancing an environmental theme with the brand's playful personality and a young audience.

My contribution

I created the brochure concept in Canva, combining panda illustrations, bold green-and-orange sections, explanatory copy and calls to action across two sides.

What this shows

Thinking beyond a single social post: organising a longer message, adapting brand tone and building a visual sequence from an opening idea to a reader action.

An academic concept

This university exercise was not commissioned or approved by The Cheeky Panda. The draft copy is illustrative, not a statement of verified environmental performance; its claims would need checking before a real campaign.

Creative by instinct. Thoughtful in practice.

I enjoy finding the small connection that makes a message click: a flower becoming a dress, a helpful answer for a parent, or a product brought to life on camera.

My experience spans fashion social content and a UK marketing internship. I'm now looking to bring that mix of creativity, communication and practical follow-through to an in-house marketing team.
