

A MARKETING PORTFOLIO WITH A PERSONAL POINT OF VIEW

Hi! I'm Meharin.

Thoughtful ideas.
Content that feels human.

I'm an MSc International Marketing graduate with Distinction, bringing together hands-on UK marketing experience, fashion social content and a love of a well-considered visual idea.

- Looking for an in-house graduate or Marketing Assistant role.

NASIMA'S CHILDCARE / LOCAL SERVICES / CHILDCARE

A clearer digital front door.

April 2025 – April 2026

Supporting a local childcare business with parent-friendly social content, Meta advertising and practical website updates.

The business's social identity, included as project context.

Selected live website excerpts: useful information and a view of the play environment.

The brief

Help a small Enfield childcare business present its services clearly to local parents. The content needed to feel reassuring, easy to understand and consistent with the information on its website.

My contribution

- Created and managed Facebook content and designed posts in Canva.
- Ran Meta Facebook Ads Manager campaigns aimed at local parents.
- Updated website HTML content and imagery through GitHub, including funded-childcare information.

What this shows

Practical marketing support across more than one channel: adapting a message for social, keeping information current and paying attention to the detail that helps a parent take the next step.

* A useful lesson

Clarity is part of the creative work. For a service like childcare, helpful information and a reassuring tone matter as much as an attractive post.

Watch the gharara video ↗

The context

Collection content had to make the clothing feel engaging beyond a still product image. Short-form formats and livestreams offered different ways to show the garments and connect with viewers.

My contribution

- Created fashion content and short-form videos for the brand's social channels.
- Hosted livestreams and presented collections to an online audience.
- Worked with formats including Reels, Stories, TikToks, YouTube videos and Facebook video.

What this shows

Confidence communicating a product's appeal, familiarity with platform-specific content and experience working as part of a brand's wider production effort.

* Content in context

Created with Anzara's wider team; my contribution was content creation and presenting. Public TikTok view counts checked on 9 October 2026. The figures refer to these two videos, not an average across all my work.

FLORA / BEAUTY / SOCIAL CREATIVE

An idea with a natural flow.

Canva concept / portfolio refinement

A flowing-hair visual that turns a simple seasonal message into a recognisable beauty concept.

An independent Canva concept, with the headline refined for this portfolio.

The creative challenge

Give a local beauty business a simple, distinctive seasonal social post. I wanted the image and the words to work together rather than compete for attention.

The idea

The hair becomes a waterfall: a visual metaphor for movement and flow. A restrained navy-and-white palette keeps the silhouette and brand name easy to recognise.

How I'd develop it

Pair the awareness post with a service-led Story and a clear booking link. I would test the message against a treatment-led version and compare booking-link clicks, not just likes.

* From concept to next step

The original Canva idea is mine. This portfolio version refines the headline to 'Let your summer style flow'. The suggested rollout and measurement are proposals, not delivered campaign results.

BODEN / FASHION / SEASONAL CREATIVE

Let the product idea bloom.

Original Canva concept

A dress silhouette grows from a flower, connecting a summer message to the product category in one glance.

An independent summer concept exploring the connection between flowers, dresses and seasonal style.

The creative challenge

Create a memorable seasonal fashion post without relying on a busy layout. The idea needed to communicate summer and clothing immediately.

The idea

The flower and dress share one silhouette, giving 'bloom' a visual meaning. Green, white space and a short headline make the concept feel fresh and easy to scan.

How I'd develop it

Extend the concept into a product-led carousel using approved collection photography, ending with a 'Shop summer dresses' call to action. I would compare product-page clicks and saves across the creative versions.

* Clear project status

This is a self-initiated creative exercise, not work commissioned, approved or published by Boden. The proposed extension is a next-step idea, not a campaign result.

THE CHEEKY PANDA / CONSUMER GOODS / BRAND COMMUNICATIONS

Making a big message feel approachable.

University brand PR exercise

A two-sided brochure concept exploring how a playful brand voice can make an environmental message more engaging for a Gen Z audience.

Brochure front: a campaign hook, a brand message and an invitation to act.

Brochure reverse: three clear message sections, cropped for the portfolio.

View the reverse artwork

The brief

Create a university brand PR concept for The Cheeky Panda, balancing an environmental theme with the brand's playful personality and a young audience.

My contribution

Created the brochure concept in Canva, combining panda illustrations, bold green-and-and-orange sections, explanatory copy and calls to action across two sides.

What this shows

Thinking beyond a single social post: organising a longer message, adapting brand tone and building a visual sequence from an opening idea to a reader action.

* An academic concept

This university exercise was not commissioned or approved by The Cheeky Panda. The draft copy is illustrative, not a statement of verified environmental performance; its claims would need checking before a real campaign.

Brochure design

Creative by instinct. Thoughtful in practice.

I enjoy finding the small connection that makes a message click: a flower becoming a dress, a helpful answer for a parent, or a product brought to life on camera.

My experience spans fashion social content and a UK marketing internship. I'm now looking to bring that mix of creativity, communication and practical follow-through to an in-house marketing team.
